> I run a dental practice. Here's a one-star Google review. Write a reply: thank them, say sorry for how they felt, ask them to call our practice manager. Don't mention any treatment or confirm they're a patient. Leave out anything you can't check. Under 80 words. Warm, not grovelling.

Then attach Paste the review text only. Leave their name out.

What comes back: four lines, none of them confirms a patient.

The reply, line by line	Why it's there
Thank you for taking the time to tell us this.	Opens calm, not defensive
We're sorry your visit left you feeling this way.	Sorry for the feeling, not an admission
We'd like to put it right. Please call Sarah, our practice manager, on 01632 960 123.	Takes it offline and names a person
Every review is read here, and this one has gone to the whole team.	Tells the next reader you act on them

Illustrative example. No treatment, no dates, no 'our records show': that's what keeps it safe.
