Your first 15 minutes with ChatGPT at work

By the end, you'll have one real email written and sent. Copilot and Gemini work the same way.

Open the one you already have

ChatGPT, Copilot or Gemini. If your work already gives you one, use your work login. There's nothing to install.

Pick one email you'd write anyway

A reply you've been putting off is ideal. Real work beats practice, because you'll know straight away whether the answer is any good.

Type this, word for word

"Write a short, friendly reply to this email. Say yes to the meeting, suggest Tuesday or Thursday morning, and keep it under 100 words. Here's the email: [paste it]"

Then tell it what to change

Treat the first answer as a draft. Type "shorter", "less formal" or "sound more like me" and it rewrites. Two or three goes is normal.

Leave out anything private

No bank details, health information or customer names. Write "the client" instead. If you wouldn't email it to the wrong person, don't paste it.

Read every line before you send

It can sound sure and still be wrong. Check each date, name and number yourself. You're sending it, so it's yours.

The whole thing on one slide

Open the one you have. Pick a real email. Paste the words. Ask for changes. Leave out private details. Check, then send.

One of these a week.

Something you can use before Friday.

25 more prompts like this, free, no form: aiforcompanies.co.uk/prompts