The notes are a mess. A job advert you'd actually post.

> I run a [14]-person [recruitment agency]. Here are my rough notes for a job we're hiring for. Write a job advert: what the job is, a normal day, what we need, and how to apply. Where my notes don't say, write CHECK instead of guessing. Under 300 words. Plain and warm, no jargon.

Then attach your notes. Leave out anything about whoever is leaving.

What comes back: five sections, and two left for you.

Section	What it says
The job in one line	Recruitment consultant, permanent, Leeds office, hybrid after three months
A normal day	Calls with candidates, writing adverts, meeting clients, updating the system
What we need	Two years in sales or recruitment, confident on the phone, organised
Pay and how to apply	CHECK the salary band and where CVs go
Closing date	Not set

Illustrative example. The two gaps are the bits only you know.
